Excerpt: . chapter xiii. the beats in komeo --burning one S fingers--splndlf. anticipations. The confidence of youth our only art, And Hope gay pilot of the bold design, We saw the living landscapes Reach after reach salute us and depart Wordsworth The travellers prepared to set forth at an early hour on the ensuing morning. The adventures of the night had tended somewhat to sour the usually sweet temper of the actor. His legs, which he displayed to the wonder and commiseration of his companion, were skinned from knee to ankle, in a way perfectly mysterious to the sufferer, who could not conceive how such an affliction could have arisen simply from his playing Romeo to empty boxes. And yet it seemed to me, among other things, that it wasn't Romeo, neither, but Hamlet. I was in the grave, grappling--I'll be sworn upon it--with Laertes, with whom I fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. It must have been in the grave that I got these bruises. That imperfect state of mind which, in dreams, so happily unites the fanciful with the actual, had, in fact, produced a rapid transition in his thoughts from the one play to the other, while his involuntary struggle in the hole with the outlaw suggested a similitude of circumstances so favorable for a change of scene; and the dawning of his right reason, which the struggle necessarily occasioned, forced upon him the partial conviction that some...
