Now for the shark! mamma; you know you promised to give us an account of those dreadful fishes. I will, indeed, my dear, with pleasure (replied Mrs. Johnson). Sharks are truly most formidable enemies to mankind, and would be more so, did not the element in which they live render their meeting rare and accidental. There are several species or kinds of sharks, some are harmless, and found to frequent the neighbourhood of our own shores, on the west coast: they are known by the name of Basking Sharks, from their habit of lying on the surface of the water, seemingly to enjoy the warm sun-shine. They are very lively and tame, and will allow themselves to be stroked; but the more dreadful kinds, which are common in the great seas, are extremely fierce, and so fond of human flesh, that it...
