Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Report of the First Anglo-Catholic Congress, London, 1920 It falls to my lot, since I have been Chairman of the Subjects Committee, to write a word of preface to the collection of papers read at the Anglo-Catholic Congress held in the Albert Hall on June 29 and 30 and July 1, 1920. The main aims of the Congress - to bring men and women to a true realisation of our Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour and King, to extend the knowledge of Catholic Faith and Practice at home and abroad as a means of promoting a right relation to God, the demonstration of the place of Catholicism within the English Church - are, it may be hoped, sufficiently clear in the papers themselves. The subjects were chosen on a definite plan so as to form a systematic series with an orderly sequence of thought. The outlook of the historic faith on the criticism and speculation of the day seemed so central and vital that it could not be given any other than the first place in the considerations of the Congress; and after this essential preliminary, the proclaiming of the Church's message in evangelising the world and in strengthening and expanding the kingdom of God naturally came next. The need of a positive foundation made it necessary to consider the claims of authority in regard to belief and discipline, the limits within which differences may be tolerated, and the ideal which we must keep in view. The problems raised by the divisions of Christendom led to the papers on the Roman Catholic Church, the Holy Orthodox Church of the East, other Christian bodies,...
