Not illustrated. 1916 Excerpt: .in the summer but instead a series of Institutes, each recruiting its membership from a particular field of social work, was held under the direction of some member of the Staff or a leader in the field engaged by the School for the purpose. During the past summer Institutes were offered in: Tuberculosis Work, Correctional Problems, Child Welfare. Believing that the extraordinary demand for trained social workers during the war called for a larger contribution by the School during the four months between its regular sessions, a summer curriculum was offered, consisting of the following courses, most of which were identical in scope with semester courses in the winter sessions: The Method of Social Case Work. Crime and Punishment. Child Welfare. Social Psycho-Pathology. Industrial Conditions. Public Administration. Community Organization. Excursions. Supervision of Play. Field Work. The requirements for admission, and the standards of instruction, were those of the regular School. The total enrollment was 103, representing the following interesting group of persons with diversified previous experience and education: Previous Experience: Social Workers 38 Teachers 29 Nurses 3 Research workers 2 Secretarial positions 2 Newspaper work, field secretary, Y. M. C.
