Mr. Canning premier--Suspension of agitation--Nolle prosequi--Kings counsel--Accident to Mr. Sheil while riding--Death of Mr. Canning--Lord Manners--Renewal of agitation--Lord Anglesea Viceroy--Agrarian disturbances--Wealth of the Established Church. On the 27th February, six weeks after the death of the Duke of York, Lord Liverpool, who for fifteen years had held the office of Prime Minister, was struck with fatal illness. The bond which so long had held together the coalition of friends and opponents of religious liberty, was suddenly dissolved, and all parties awaited the result with breathless anxiety. The pause was long, and as day after day rolled by without any announcement of a solution, the public began to have a sense, though a dim and imperfect one, of the difficulties that encompassed the situation. We now read the events of that singular interlude between the great acts of ostensible history, with the help...
